In the world of the 1960s, Anchorage requires an effective World Affairs Council as an integral part of its educational and cultural life. In a time when our international actions are so critical to survival of our system, and in a society where popular ideas and actions are so fundamental to foreign policy, a requisite segment of the educational and cultural life of each major community is a specialized agency such as the World Affairs Council, which specifically seeks sustainably to bring information about the events and issues of our times, through the program means most useful, to all sectors of the community.
